Resolution for Oracle 2013 Shareholders Meeting on Human Rights Committee

Be it resolved, that the following proposal be adopted by Oracle shareholders:

Oracle will establish a Human Rights Committee, including independent relevant human rights experts, to review, assess, disclose, and make recommendations to enhance the company's policy and practice on human rights. Among others, the Human Rights Committee will solicit public input and to issue periodic reports to shareholders and the public, on the committee's activities, findings and recommendations, and adopt any other measures consistent with applicable principles and laws.

Supporting Statement

From the Chinese Tiananmen tragedy in 1989 to the recent "Arab Spring" movement, human rights issues have become the most important international concerns for every corporation doing business globally. Especially, the human rights concern of international companies doing business in repressive countries is from the core issue of legitimacy. As the world's largest provider of enterprise software and a leading provider of computer products and services (including cloud computing, which involves many human rights issues such as privacy, freedom of express), our company also has extensive business in repressive countries including China, where people's basic human rights are severely violated (for example, I was deprived of my citizenship without any written document because I organized human rights activities in Japan during the 1989 Tiananmen Massacre).

On the other hand, our company has neither a human rights policy nor an organization/mechanism to deal with human rights issues. For example, our 2010 Corporate Citizenship Report

<http://www.oracle.com/us/corporate/citizenship/corporate-citizenship-report-2010-1566826.pdf> admits nowhere to report human rights concerns in our company (page 119 on GRI G3 reporting guidelines). No wonder the independent think tank US-Japan-China Comparative Policy Research Institute ranks our company "C-" in Corporate Social Responsibility Index.
